Economic Development Strategies Changing in New Global Economy

The following was written by Jim Glover of The Idea Group. Glover continues to work with Los Lunas on branding and associated projects.

The Los Lunas council and staff understand that traditional rural economic development is changing and that new strategies and tactics must be deployed to compete in the current global economy. To ensure the village remains competitive and to build a sustainable community, Los Lunas's economic development approach had changed to better align with the rapid changes in today's market.

A Community That Works

The new slogan for the village's economic development is "A Community That Works" which supports the department's desire to ensure that national, regional, local businesses, and even home-based workers succeed within the community.

With room-to-grow, close to Albuquerque, situated on I-25 and the Rio Grande, and with available incentives and progressive local leadership, Los Lunas is one of the fastest growing towns in New Mexico.

"We Want to Lead"

"We want to lead, not follow," said Ralph Mims, economic development manager for Los Lunas. "We've completed a yearlong branding project for our community and now have a clear understanding of our unique positioning, our targets, our messaging and our approach. We have developed our marketing action plan and will be very proactive in promoting the salable aspects of the village using both traditional

Camelot Road Improvements Completed

Improvements totaling $375,000 have been completed on Camelot Road on the southwest side of the village, said Michael Jaramillo, director of Los Lunas Parks, Recreation and Streets Department which was in charge of the work.

The work included repairing missing or damaged sidewalks, creating Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) accessible handicap ramps, and relocating utility communication pedestals blocking pedestrian movement.

Jaramillo said a goal of the project was to improve pedestrian and bicycling safety from the residential neighborhoods to Main Street.

Rio Metro recently added several new bus stops in the Camelot Road area for greater access to the Los Lunas Public Transportation System.

and inbound/social media marketing."

The village's economic development efforts are now designed to show Los Lunas is a small community with big possibilities. The village's active support of "Live/Work Los Lunas," a program aiding home-based workers and the fact Los Lunas is host to the 2013 Rural Economic Development Forum are strong indicators Los Lunas is truly a community that works.

Sharing Our Community

"Our job now is to share with prospects what our community is all about. We are creating informative videos about the village and capturing new photos as well. We are enhancing our website content to clearly explain how our economic development department supports business growth. And we are planning to utilize new technologies such as webinars to convey our compelling story to potential recruitment candidates," added Mims. "These are exciting times for our village."

The village council and staff welcome input and thoughts regarding the community branding project. Visit the village website, www.loslunasnm.gov, or stop by the lobby of the administration building at Don Pasqual and Main Street to view more of the branding presentation.

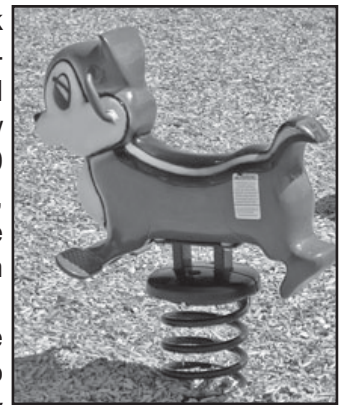

Huning Ranch Park Now Open

Huning Ranch Park with its playgrounds, basketball court, field and workout equipment is now open. It is located at 400 Huning Ranch Loop SW, but the parking area can be accessed at the intersection of Solitude and Sundance.

In 2011, the Village allocated $200,000 to build a playground facility accessible to all ages and physical abilities off Huning Ranch Loop.

The park also has shade structures, picnic tables, trash receptacles and landscaping.

Huning Ranch Park is estimated to cost $1.8 million when all park amenities are completed, said Michael Jaramillo, director of the village Parks, Recreation and Streets Department.

Lots of play equipment at Huning Ranch Park.

Village Has New Municipal Judge

Henry Perea is the now the municipal judge for the Village of Los Lunas following the resignation of Judge Jeff Aragon earlier this summer.

Perea's term is until the March 2014 election. Perea could run for municipal judge in that election.
